AMERICAN DAY.

With an enthusiasm that exceeded the most sanguine expectations, American Day was observed at the Lagoon Tuesday, coming to a close at midnight with a record for fun, facts and success that will stand until the annual event rolls around once more.

In the speeches that were made, the opening arguments that were fired in the campaign that is to give Sait Lake a continuation of the present era of improvement and advancement the day was most notable. The utterances of Mayor Bransford were concise and strong, telling in effective words the story of the American party progress, its efforts, its aims and the future that awaits it. J. E. Darmer, Joseph Lippman and Frank R. Christensen warmed to their subjects following Mr. Bransford's speech and as they progressed the great crowd that heard them, interrupted time and again to express approval of their sentiments. It was an American day in the fullest sense of the word. Americans to the number of twelve thousand thronged the resort grounds and noticeable among them were the hundreds of briness men who, for the day, forsook their offices to mingle with their political affil'ates and infuse into the occasion that spirit of banded strength and unity that has been the keynote of the American party's success.

As indicative of the lines along which the American campaign is to be waged this fall in Salt Lake, Moyor Bransford's speech was most important. Calling attention to the fact that there are now in progress about the city oven two million dollars' worth of municipal improvements. He said: "The city's portion of these improvements amounting to over $300,000, has been borne without any additional tax on the citizens and I am here to assure you now that thirteen mills will be the tax levy for city purposes this year and no more."

The day was a great success, a success indicative of the greater success at the polls this fall.

It is said that Jikiri, the Moro bandit who was killed by United States troops lately, had sworn an oath to take one hundred lives before he died. He had almost made good when his laudable ambition was checked by death. Jikiri labored under the disadvantages that incommode the igzorant savage everywhere. He should have come to this country and established a soda fountain. He would not only have realized the dream of his life, but would have ended his days in peace and plenty.

HARRIMAN'S ILLNESS.

For a year or more reports have been ever recurring that E. H. Harriman's health is broken, in fact, that overwork has brought the financier very close to the end. Just as often, however, have these reports been contradicted by Mr. Harriman, his physicians, his friends and his family. As the railroad king's enormous interests would suffer greatly in the financial marts if his reported s'ckness was accepted as the truth, these denials, of course, have counted for very little, and, to the farseeing, Mr. Harriman's departure for Europe several months ago and the departure subsequently of his children and mother to join him at Bad Gastein has been of more consequence than would appear on the surface perhaps. To those who have met Mr. Harriman personally during the past six months the two departures suggested that Mr. Harriman's condition is anything but satisfactory despite the glowing newspaper cables to the contrary, and it is now reported that the railroad man is suffering from locomotor ataxia, and while there may be no cause for immediate alarm in the case, it was evidently deemed desirable that his family be with him.
